Saving Gilbert's potoroo

A challenge for science and the community

Dr Tony Friend

Department of Environment and Conservation, Albany

Thought to be extinct, Gilbert's potoroo was rediscovered near Albany in 1994. Fewer than 40 survived in dense scrub on the rugged Mount Gardner headland. A conservation program commenced to bring this marsupial back from the brink. 17 years later there are three populations and close to 100 animals known.
